REPLY TO PARENT

THE Adelaide father who plained in a letter to "The News" that the English syllabus for the leaving examination at present seemed to be overloaded with "ille-rature," and that it should be made of more practical value to boys, received little support from Ada-laide educational authorities today.

Sir-The thanks of parents are due to "An Adelaide Father" for ventilating this matter. It adequate proportion of their all too crowded timetable at college and high school to studying imetable at college and high school to studyin on sound, sensible lines the English language as they will require to write it in after life I find that our Australian youth, candidates it the intermediate last year, including, mark you those strains for the commercial the intermediate last year, including, mark you those striving for the commercial certificate were (according to the "Manual of the Public Examinations Board") addling their brains trying to elucidate such appalling rubbish as—
