FREE UNIVERSITY.

WESTERN AUSTRALIAN PROPOSAL.

PERTH, September 15.

If brought into existence on the lines recommended by the royal commission the Western Australian University will be the first free university established within the British Empire, and this would mean the realization for the first time in any British State of Huxley's ideal of a great educational ladder with one end in the gutter and the other in the university. The commission's report, which has been laid on the table of the Legislative Assembly, recommends:—1. The establishment of the university without delay. 2. That the constitution should, so far as possible, conform to the type adopted by the universities in the eastern States, but with such amendments as will bring it into full accord with modern and liberal requirements. 3. That in all respects members of both sexes shall enjoy equal facilities, rights, and privileges. 4. That the commission favours the view that the university should be free to all students, and suggests, if fees are found to be necessary, these should be on the lowest possible scale. 5. That faculties be formed in arts and science (pure and applied), law, and perhaps music, and at a later stage in medicine and surgery. In the division of applied science, colleges of study in agriculture, mining, and engineering should, in the opinion of the commission, be undertaken at the outset, and while it may not be possible for some time to provide for a full course in medicine, early arrangements should be made for diplomas in dentistry and veterinary science. The commission suggests that at the establishment of the university four professors should be appointed, in addition to the Chair of Agriculture (which Dr. Hackett has undertaken to endow), and recommends there should be a professor of modern literature and history, a professor of mathematics and physics, a professor of chemistry, and a professor of engineering and mining. The commission, in addition, suggests there should also be five lectureships established at the beginning. 6. That Parliament be asked to provide £10,000 for the purpose of the university, and an additional £2,000 for the purpose of providing scholarships and exhibitions; but that if it be decided that teaching in the university shall be free, Parliament be asked to increase the annual grant to an extent sufficient to cover the estimated loss that would accrue through fees not being charged. The initial revenue, allowing for fees, is estimated at £13,650, including Government grants £12,000, class fees £1,000, and income and endowment trust £150. The expenditure is put down at £13,376, and the principal items are:—Administrative staff, £1,676; teaching staff, £6,450; scholarships and exhibitions, £2,000; examination expenses, printing, and so on, £1,000; and rentbooks and laboratory appliances, £2,250. The initial cost would depend largely upon the policy of the Government with regard to the new buildings. Three sites had been suggested—Government House, Parliament Buildings, and a site near to the Subiaco Railway Station. Government House, by reason of its situation, was unsuitable. Parliament House could be used with advantage for university purposes if the Government decided to build new quarters for the Legislature. Failing this, the commission would favour the site near to Subiaco, where from 80 to 100 acres of land could be acquired.

REVIVAL IN LEARNING

BRISBANE ENQUIRERS ABROAD.

Two visitors from Queensland (Messrs. J. D. Story (Under Secretary for Public Instruction) and A. B. Brady (Under Secretary for Public Works and Government Architect) are in Adelaide on a mission connected with the forward movement in technical and higher education in Brisbane. They are making enquiries at the University and the School of Mines and Industries that are expected to be of considerable value to the authorities in their own State. Particular attention is being given to these institutions because, although further information will be gathered in Melbourne and Sydney, the Adelaide conditions in relation to the population served more nearly approach those of Brisbane.

—New Use for Government House.—

When seen on Thursday Mr. Story stated:—"The Queensland Government has lately established a University and a Central Technical College. The Government House and grounds were dedicated for University purposes, and the building is being altered to meet requirements. It is also intended to erect a Central Technical College for the State in the University domain, and plans are being prepared accordingly. Mr. Brady is specially interested in the buildings and equipment, as he will be responsible for that part of the undertaking. Tenders for the first section will probably be invited within about two months. Alterations to the former Government House are well advanced, and should be completed before the end of the year. Since our arrival in Adelaide on Wednesday we have inspected the School of Mines on North terrace, and were much impressed by what we saw. We had heard that this institution was regarded as one of the most up-to-date of its kind in Australia. The University we have yet to see thoroughly, as to-day there was only time to be shown over the engineering school, which Professor Chapman explained to us. In the contemplated Brisbane premises there will be a central administrative block, an art school, commercial school, domestic branch, physics, chemistry, and agricultural laboratories, engineering buildings (mechanical and electrical), plumbing and carpentry shops, foundry, pattern shops, and other departments. Portions of the Technical college premises will be used in conjunction with the University itself. The main idea is to make each department complete so far as possible in a separate building. There will be nine new buildings in all, independent of the former Government House, which will comprise lecture rooms and rooms for the professors and University administrative staff. The Technical College part of the buildings will be used for practical and science work in connection with the University degree courses.

—Selecting Professors.—

"The University of Queensland," explained Mr. Story, "will be begun with four chairs—Classics, Engineering, Chemistry, and Physics and Mathematics combined. The salary of the professors will be £900 per annum. Applications for professorships were advertised throughout Australasia and Great Britain. More than 100 were received for the four positions, so that it is likely the senate will be able to make a good choice. Its decisions will not be announced for about two months, as the arrival of the English applications is awaited. The advisory committee in the old country consists of three persons, one of whom is Professor Bragg, of the Leeds University, and formerly of Adelaide. Professor Bragg is held in such high esteem in Queensland that he was approached, and consented to give us all the assistance in his power. The Government grants an endowment of £10,000 a year for seven years toward the University. At the end of that period the amount of endowment will be reconsidered. The Government has also granted 20 scholarships, each with a currency of three years. To the winners of those scholarships who are able to live at their homes and attend the University a grant of £26 a year will be made, and to those who must live away from home £52 a year. Each scholarship also carries with it free tuition, including laboratory instruction. What may be termed almost a revival of learning has set in in Queensland. The sum granted by the Government toward education, including primary, technical, secondary, and University, is £400,000 a year, exclusive of the amount to be expended on buildings. An additional £70,000 has been set apart for Technical College and University building purposes. Those with whom our enquiries in Adelaide have brought us in touch have been exceedingly kind, and have given all the assistance in their power." The visitors will return on Saturday. To-day will be spent mostly in an inspection of the University. They were present at the school children's thousand voices' concert on Thursday evening.

Mr. W. A. Laver, who is connected with the staff of the Victorian Conservatorium of Music, has been visiting South Australia this week. Mr. Laver and Dr. Ennis conducted musical examinations at Gawler, Riverton, Petersburg, and Adelaide, in connection with the affiliated Victorian and South Australian Universities. Mr. Laver said there was a strong disposition on the part of the musical branches of the various universities to adopt uniform examinations. Already Queensland had signified its intention of joining with Victoria and South Australia, and he had noticed out of the four faculties to be provided for at the new university in Western Australia it was intended to maintain a Chair of Music.

ADELAIDE'S UNIVERSITY.

ITS NEEDS FOR EXTENSION.

PARLIAMENTARY MEMBERS' RIGHTS.

A strongly-supported deputation waited upon the Commissioner of Public Works (Hon. J. Verran) and the Minister of Education (Hon. F. W. Coneybeer) yesterday morning with regard to some present and future needs of the University of Adelaide.

A Little Hitch.

The Chancellor of the University (Sir Samuel Way) was about to introduce the deputation to Ministers when the Commissioner, interposing, said—"There is one matter which you appear to have overlooked, gentlemen. I always make it a point that any deputation which is introduced to me shall be so introduced by the member for the district concerned. You are from the Adelaide District, and the members for Adelaide should have the right conferred upon them which is theirs, by virtue of their position. I do not want to take any advantage of you, still, I maintain that I am not going to receive a deputation unless the members for the district—of Adelaide in this instance—who have been appointed by the great body of the voters in their electorate, introduce the deputation to me. Those members should be given the right of their privileges.

Sir Samuel Way—This intimation comes as a surprise to us. It is the first we have heard of your having laid down a new rule in regard to the reception of deputations. For the last 28 years I have had the privilege of representing the University at such functions as this. We have followed along the lines we have always gone upon, and have not done this out of any disrespect towards members for the District of Adelaide. We have come here on business as between the University and the Government, and I do not think you mean to say you won't hear us unless we are introduced by members.

The Commissioner—I say that absolutely. I take the stand that all the honor and dignity attaching to the position of a member of Parliament should be accorded to that member by his constituents.

Sir Samuel Way—I think you misunderstand me. For 30 years I have represented the University, and this is the first time this rule has been mentioned. I have been before your immediate predecessors often, and the matter was never then suggested. We made this appointment with you, and we received no intimation of a change of practice. The University of Adelaide is not a local institution, but an institution having regard to the whole of the State.

The Commissioner—You are a local body, coming to ask the Government for certain concessions. If I allow you to come to me without proper introduction I create a precedent for other people to come here and also ignore their members.

Sir Samuel Way—We are not a local body. Our work extends over the whole State, and we have ignored no one consciously. We did not know we should have to be introduced by our members.

The Commissioner—I thought that the deputation understood there were members for the District of Adelaide whose duty and right it was to introduce such a body to me. If a man can be flouted in one way he can be flouted in another.

Sir Samuel Way—I wish, sir, you would not make such accusations. We had not the slightest intention of flouting anybody. For years we have been received by the successive Premiers of the State as we have come before you to-day, and this is the first time that we have been told that we have flouted anybody.

At this stage further contention lapsed while several members of the deputation went scouting for a member of Parliament for the Adelaide District, returning shortly with Mr. W. D. Ponder, M.P.

Mr. Ponder formally introduced the deputation, adding that one of the requests which would be preferred would be the need for the extension of the grounds of the University so as to allow of additional buildings being erected. He did not think that the valuable site on which the Destitute Asylum now stood could be put to better use than that suggested by the authorities of the University.

Unpaid Subsidies.

Sir Samuel Way proceeded to make known the requests of the deputation. He prefaced his remarks with an allusion to the hitch that had occurred at the commencement of the morning's proceedings. He had always looked upon the University as a non-political institution.

The Commissioner—Quite so.

Sir Samuel Way continued that, regarding the University in that light, it had never suggested itself to him or his colleagues that they should need to be introduced to the Government by a member of their district. They regarded themselves as belonging to an institution which represented the whole State. Dealing with the objects of the deputation he said that it was first proposed to ask Ministers to reply to the requests made by a deputation which had waited upon the late Premier (Hon. A. H. Peake) on October 23 last. They were asking for the payment of the customary subsidy for new buildings which the University already had erected, and, secondly, for the same subsidy for buildings of immediate urgency. Thirty-four years ago that subsidy had been started, and the right of the University to it had never been doubted. During the last eight years the University had put up such buildings as the Elder Hall, Prince of Wales' buildings, and medical school, all of which had been very much required. The cost of those amounted to £35,650 and the Government subsidy would therefore be £17,825. At the time these buildings were put in hand they did not apply for the subsidy. The buildings had been urgently required, and they had paid the cost fully expecting that the customary subsidy would never be denied when application was made for it. That was the first request which the deputation had to put before Ministers.

What Other States Do.

Further, the University had immediate wants very pressing indeed, for new buildings. During the last 10 years there had been an unprecedented expansion of the University. In 1899 there were 581 students; in 1909 there were 1040. In the former year there were eight professors and 16 lecturers; there were now 11 professors and 29 lecturers. In Adelaide there was urgent need for more money for the University. Look what was being done elsewhere. During the last 10 years in Sydney the Government had spent in buildings for the University £150,000. This was not a Government subsidy on the pound for pound basis, but the whole cost borne by the Government. In Melbourne, in addition to the subsidy the Government had spent £70,000 on buildings for the University between the years 1883 and 1902. That was what was being done in those States, and he would enumerate the wants of the Adelaide institution in the matter of buildings. The need for the extension of the library was becoming imperative; additional lecturers were needed for the schools of classics and philosophy; adequate accommodation was required for the law school, geological, and mineralogical departments, a caretaker's lodge was urgently needed, accommodation for herbarium and department of botany was not available. They needed common room for students and provision for school of dentistry and veterinary science. The sum that had been asked Mr. Peake's Ministry was £11,000, but that day they were forced to add another thousand to that sum in order to cover the cost of common rooms for the students. Such a want was now being painfully felt. The total cost therefore would be £12,000, and the Government subsidy would amount to £6000. They wanted, furthermore, to begin building at once so that they could complete the work before March next, and thus not interfere with the work of the University. Ministers might ask why these needs had not been made known earlier. He would explain that that on November 25 last they had waited upon Mr. Peake. The House was then anxious to rise, and although Mr. Peake had not given a direct answer he had assured them he was thoroughly in sympathy with them and would place the requests before his colleagues.

Destitute Asylum Site Wanted.

Such were the first and second portions of their requests; the third was not, he said, a matter of such immediate urgency, but it was, nevertheless, one of great practical importance. It dealt with the area of ground on which their buildings stood. At present they were crippled and confined within an area as small as five acres. Melbourne University boasted of 100 acres and Sydney of 128. And the small, inadequate space now had been built upon to a great extent all within the last 10 years, and when they cast their minds back and saw the extension of buildings that had taken place during the last 30 years they became alarmed at the prospect before them in the next 50 or 100 years. Undoubtedly they must have more than these few acres. Even now they were building for ages to come and must make accommodation for the requirements of the future. There seemed a splendid opportunity of shortly getting increased acreage. This could be done if the area now covered by the police barracks and Destitute Asylum were handed over to the University. Those buildings were old, but no doubt some of them, with but comparatively little alteration, could be utilised by the council. They did not come forward to influence the policy of the Government respect to the removal of the Destitute Asylum, but merely to urge that if any were done the land should be devoted to the most worthy of purposes—the extension of the University and the State and an education block thus formed which would be the envy of every State in Australia and the admiration of every visitor who came to these shores. He concluded by reading a letter from Mr. Barr Smith, whose ripe experience and patriotic ardor fitted him to give an expression on such an important question. In this letter Mr. Barr Smith said:—

"Dear Sir Samuel Way—I am very sorry I am not able to be with you on the deputation to the Premier to-day. I hope you will be able to convince him that there is no other public use to which the land you are applying for can be put, at all so important as using it for the subsidiary buildings necessary to the healthy expansion of the University. We are completely surrounded and hemmed in by other institutions; the sole outlet for the University is in the direction of the Destitute Asylum and the police parade ground. I hope you will be able to obtain the promise of a reversionary interest in these, and as immediate possession as is consistent with public convenience. It is our last chance; there is no other place available. We must go on greatly crippled if we do not get this land. In the eastern States the need of room by the universities has been there liberally provided for. The Premier must be convinced that your present application is very reasonable and moderate.—Always, yours very truly, R. Barr Smith."

Professorships Unfilled.

That letter said the Chancellor must carry great weight, especially when added to it was the knowledge that at present the University had neither rooms nor money to pay salaries of professors lecturers in such subjects as French, German, biology, public health, pathology, zoology, ancient history, astronomy, botany, veterinary science, dentistry, for a needed division of chairs at the University. These were not new demands; some of them had been before the council for years. They were awaiting and clamoring for attention. In addition to those there was the question of residential colleges.

The Hon. Richard Butler said that he knew there was an intention on the part of the Federal Government to try to secure the site on which the Destitute Asylum now stood for Federal purposes. It was one of the most valuable sites in the State, and the late Mr. T. Price would have warmly supported the proposal, devote it to educational matters, which he had always done much to advance (Hear, hear.) He wanted to add the members on the Opposition side of the House did not look upon the University question as a party one, and would always support reasonable requests.

Mr. van Senden (president of the Chamber of Commerce), as representative of the commercial community, asked the Commissioner and Minister of Education to consider most carefully advisableness of extending as much possible instruction in commerce. It would be a most welcome thing to the commercial houses in this State if the University were able to bestow a degree in commerce as was done in other countries. To do this further accommodation would be necessary. He referred also to the necessity for residential colleges in order to get the true esprit corps of a university, besides providing for country students proper facilities for study.

The Defence Authorities' Intention.

Mr. T. H. Smeaton, M.P., said that he would object to such a name as Education Square being applied to the area covered by the university buildings. This title had been suggested but not euphonious enough for him.

knew that the defence authorities intended to approach the Government in regard to a transfer of the Destitute Asylum site in order to extend their own grounds, but he did not think there were any insuperable difficulties in the way of its being made over to the University. As regarded the matter of the subsidy for which the deputation had asked, that was a matter which concerned partly past Governments and was one now for the Premier and his colleagues to carefully think out.

Mr. F. W. Young, M.L.A., referred principally to the need for money expienced by the University.

Mr. T. Ryan, M.P., agreed in the main with the request of the deputation, but joined issue with them in regard to their request for the transfer of the Destitute Asylum site. When they saw how the University had expanded, and remembered that they had a Government in power which believed in placing the University within the reach of every bright child in the State he thought they would agree it was of no use in entering upon further building on an area of only 14 acres. They needed to go where they could get 40 or 50 acres, and build what would be a permanent University.

Sir Samuel Way pointed out in this regard that the deputation was dealing only with immediate wants. He added that they did not want the £17,000 in cash, but as an endowment, so that the money they had expended would be replaced, and they would get an income to carry on their work.

This concluded the arguments advanced by the deputation.

Premier's Attitude.

The Commissioner for Public Works, in his reply to the requests submitted, said he fully agreed with Mr. Butler that the question was not a party one. He realised that the family at the University had grown too big for its home, and he was very pleased to know it. While South Australia during the last few years had been progressing materially it had been speeding ahead also in intellectual and moral progress. While there had been a beneficial breaking up of the broad acres of the State's land there had also been a breaking up of the intellectual land of the human mind. The president of the Chamber of Commerce had put forward a suggestion as to the creation of a degree in commerce. It was a splendid idea, and he agreed that one of the best things they could do was to have their young men trained in commercial life so as to keep pace with the development of the State. The intellectual and moral powers of life must be equally developed with other departments, and this the Government fully realised. (Hear, hear.) He knew that the State would never lose by helping educational institutions, but there were times when that help could not be given however much the Government might desire to give it. As to the first question which had been submitted, that relating to subsidies, he would only say at the present moment that the Government would give the request careful consideration. As to the amounts which Mr. Butler and Mr. Peake had suggested placing on the Estimates, that was a matter which would require some consideration by Ministers. In his opinion, if the country wanted a great University it would have to place it farther out where there was room and free air. The University had been placed in the best situation for the day in which it was built, but now, to use the argument of the chancellor, they had to look to the needs also of future ages. He asked them to consider whether it would not be better to think of placing the University where there was more room.

Mr. Smeaton—It means a lot of money.

The Commissioner said that would, no doubt, be the case; but he was using the argument advanced by the chancellor that they had to look to the needs of the future. If the University were going to extend would the small piece of land now being asked for be sufficient for that extension? Personally, he thought it would not be for the extension he would like to see come to pass. They should go where they could get 100 acres and start building there. At the present time they had to pay from £175 to £200 per foot for land in the city, and it was a question the Government had seriously to consider whether it could afford to give away land which it wanted badly for Government purposes. Would the Government be justified in parting with that land? He had a very fine affection for the University, but thought there was no justification for such a policy, and that had been his views for the last seven years. They had before them just now the problem of training teachers to go throughout the State, and they were looking for a place to train them. All these matters had to be weighed and considered before he could reply with more definiteness. One thing was certain—his Government would never part with the Destitute Asylum to the Commonwealth Government. Concluding, he said he would submit to his colleagues and carefully consider the several requests prepared relative to money, buildings, and grounds required.

The Minister for Education said the requests had been very fairly put, and the Premier had honestly answered them. He wanted to take that opportunity of relieving from the minds of the deputationists any misapprehension that the Premier had created a new law in regard to the introduction of deputations by members. In the past it had been done by other Ministers, and he did not want them to go away with the opinion that this was something new which Verran's Government had done. He dealt with his aims of extending education to every section of the community. He did not want anyone standing off and regarding the University as some conservative body with which he had no chance. It must be brought into closer touch with the mass of the people. As regarded the Destitute Asylum site, he regarded that as the most desirable spot for a teachers' training college.

The deputation then withdrew.

THE ADELAIDE UNIVERSITY.

PROVIDING FOR EXPANSION.

DEPUTATION TO THE PREMIER.

On Thursday morning a deputation from the Adelaide University waited on the Premier (Hon. J. Verran) to ask requests for certain concessions which had been under consideration for some years.

In introducing the deputation, Mr. W. D. Ponder, M.P., said the deputation requested that the land which would be available when the Destitute Asylum Buildings were removed should be reserved for future extensions of the University. An increased grant was also desired.

The Chancellor of the University (Sir Samuel Way) expressed their indebtedness to Mr. Ponder for having consented to introduce the deputation at very short notice. He would like to add that they had always looked upon the University as a non-political institution.

Mr. Verran—Quite so.

The Chancellor, continuing, said their first object was to ask for a reply to the request made by a deputation which waited upon the late Premier (Mr. A. H. Peake) towards the end of last year. At that time they asked for payment of the customary subsidy for the new buildings which had been erected, and for the same subsidy for buildings to be erected immediately. Since the foundation of the University 34 years ago they had been subsidised on a £ to £ basis. They had not received a subsidy on the buildings for the last eight to ten years. Such large buildings as the Elder Hall, Conservatorium, and Prince of Wales Theatre had been constructed at a cost of £35,650, the subsidy on which would be £17,825. When the buildings were erected application was not made for payment of the subsidy. Large gifts for the purpose of endowing the University were available and they were utilised in providing buildings. The money had not been applied for, because of the financial difficulties in which the State was then placed. During the past 10 years there had been an unprecedented expansion of the operations of the University, and there was a pressing need for new buildings. While in 1899 there were 581 students, the present number was about 1,040. During the same period the number of professors had increased from 8 to 11, and the number of lecturers from 16 to 29. The fine block of buildings they now had had all been erected in the last 10 or 12 years, with the exception of the original Universal building. For the last 20 years they had received no grant whatever apart from the subsidy of 10 per cent. on their income. During the last six or seven years the New South Wales Government had paid £150,000 for new University buildings, while in Victoria, in addition to a subsidy of £21,000, as against that of £7,000 or £8,000 received for the Adelaide University, the Government had paid £37,000 extra in grants, and had spent £70,000 on new buildings, between 1883 and 1902. It was stated at the deputation which waited on Mr. Peake in November last that the works they most urgently needed comprised the following:

—Extension of the library; additional lecture-rooms for the schools of classics and philosophy; adequate accommodation for the professors, the law school, the geological and mineralogical departments; a caretaker's lodge; and accommodation for the herbarium and the department of botany. These works would cost £11,000, but they now asked that the amount be increased by £1,000. The number of their students made a common room urgently necessary, and that would raise the cost of the proposed works to £12,000. On that amount they asked for a Government subsidy of £6,000. The bulk of the buildings must be erected during the vacation. They desired to begin the work at once in order to complete it before March next, so as not to interfere with the work of the institution. They owed a great deal to his late colleague, Sir Henry Bunday, for the foundation of the University. Every Government did not get such strong support as did the present Administration. (The Premier—"That is very kind." Laughter.) He was non-political. He supported every Government when he thought they were right, and he held his peace if he considered them to be wrong. (Laughter.) The grounds of the University of Sydney comprised 128 acres, and of the University of Melbourne 100 acres, while the Adelaide institution only had five acres. If the expansion to which he had referred had taken place during the last 28 years, what progress could they expect in the next 50 years? He knew that the question of removing the Destitute Asylum had been under consideration for some time. Those buildings covered four acres. He hoped that the Government would be able to provide better accommodation for the old people outside the city grounds, and that the buildings and grounds could be made available for University purposes. Some of the buildings could be used almost at once for lecture rooms. Last year it was suggested in the press that the education block should be made complete by handing over to the University the site not only of the Destitute Asylum, but also the site at present used for the military and police quarters, so that the University would then have an area of 13 acres. He had received from Mr. R. Barr Smith a letter apologising for his inability to attend, and stating that there was no other public use to which the land referred to could be applied than for subsidiary buildings to allow of the healthy expansion of the University. They were completely hemmed in by other institutions, and their only outlet for the University was in the direction of the Destitute Asylum and the police parade ground. (Applause.)

The Hon. R. Butler, M.P., supported the request. The land referred to was the most valuable State-owned site in Adelaide. Education had advanced, and the time was at hand when the University should be at the disposal of every capable boy and girl. (Applause.) The question of higher education, which was not a party one, would receive the most sympathetic support of members of his side of the House. (Applause.)

Mr. E. W. van Senden (president of the Chamber of Commerce) referred to the desirability of extending instruction in commerce at the University. To the commercial houses of the States it would be welcome news that the University purposed bestowing a degree in commerce. (Hear, hear.) That was done at other universities. Residential colleges were also worthy of consideration. In such a place a student would have a quiet home for study.

Mr. T. H. Smeaton, M.P., said it had been the intention of the Defence Department to apply for an extension of the grounds. He thought some arrangement could be arrived at satisfactory to both departments. He supported the request.

Mr. F. W. Young, M.P., said the tendency was to extend the facilities for secondary and technical education, and the result of that would be a largely increased number of students.

Mr. T. Ryan, M.P., while expressing his approval of the request of the deputation, said if the land asked for were handed over there would only be a miserable 13 acres. What was required was 30 to 40 acres. In a few years there might be added to the roll 1,000 names.

The Chancellor added that they did not ask that the £17,000 should be paid to them in cash, but they wanted it as an endowment. They wanted more money to extend the work. For instance, they really should have two chairs for classics, and chairs of public health, pathology, zoology, ancient history, astronomy, botany, and veterinary science.

The Premier, in reply, said he was forcibly reminded that the family of the University had become too big for its home. They were all pleased to know that South Australia had made such excellent progress during the past few years, and he was satisfied that the system of higher education would have to keep pace with that progress. He could assure them that their request for the money would receive the most careful consideration. The Peake-Butler Government had suggested that that amount should be placed on the Estimates and it was now receiving attention. If, however, there was going to be a greater University it was a question whether it would not be wise to get out of the city to where they could procure a larger area, and have greater freedom.

Mr. Smeaton—It will mean a lot of money.

The Premier—Probably it would, but they had to remember that they were legislating not for the present day only but for the future. If the area of the University was to be extended as suggested he was not quite so sure that the small area they were asking for would be equal to all the demands of the future. It might be better to get out where they could procure, say, 100 acres, and there erect buildings that would be equal to all the demands that would be made upon it. When the Government had to pay up to £200 per foot in the city for land that probably would be required for Government purposes he did not know that they would be justified in parting with the land referred to. The Government had to deal with the difficulty of securing and training teachers, but they must consider the University equally with the public schools. There need be no fear for the present that the Government were going to hand the Destitute Asylum block over to the Commonwealth. He would submit the whole matter to his colleagues, and they would carefully consider the three main points raised, (1) as to new buildings, (2) as to the amount of money required, and (3) as to the area of land. (Applause.) The Minister of Education (Hon. F. W. Coneybeer) also replied. He said he wanted to extend education to every section of the community, so that boys and girls who had brains could develop them. He wanted the University to be something different from a conservative institution, which young men and women thought they had little chance of entering. On the land on which the Destitute Asylum was erected he would like to see a training college for teachers.

PREMIER AND DEPUTATIONS.

MEMBERS' PRIVILEGES.

UPHELD BY THE PREMIER.

A temporary hitch occurred on Thursday morning when a deputation waited on the Premier (Hon. J. Verran) and the Minister of Education (Hon. F. W. Coneybeer) from the Adelaide University, to make a number of requests bearing on the interests of that body. Following his usual custom, the Chancellor (Sir Samuel Way) had arranged that he should introduce the deputation and explain the request, but as soon as the Premier entered the room he made it clear that he did not approve of that course.

"I would like to say at once, and most respectfully," he said, "that there are four members representing the district of Adelaide, and I always make it a point that if a deputation is going to be introduced to me the members for the district concerned should have that privilege. I do not want to take any advantage of you, but I am not going to receive any deputation unless the members for the district, who are appointed by the electors to represent them, are here to introduce you. You have a choice of Mr. Blundell, Mr. Ponder, Mr. Denny (the Attorney-General), or Mr. Anstey."

Mr. F. W. Young, M.P.—Do you know if it is convenient to get any of these members?

The Premier—Yes, I know the Attorney-General is in his office.

The Chancellor (Sir Samuel Way)—I had no intimation, prior to this, Mr. Premier, that you had decided to lay down a new law. For 30 odd years I have been in the habit of waiting on the Premier of the day on behalf of the University. This is a new departure and it was not communicated to me until this instant, so that our presence here to-day cannot be taken as a mark of disrespect to the members for the district, as we have come here by appointment. You will hardly say now that you will not hear us.

The Premier—I say absolutely that I will not unless you are introduced by a member for the district. Your long standing position in connection with the University, as a Minister of the Crown, and a member of Parliament must certainly have made you acquainted with the procedure. I do not say that you would do anything discourteous, but you must know that in a matter like this the men to introduce the deputation are the members for the district of Adelaide.

The Chancellor—I think, Mr. Premier, that you have misunderstood what I said. For 30 odd years I have had the privilege of representing the University in requests to the Government, and this is the first time it has been intimated to me that a new procedure has been laid down. I attended your immediate predecessor and his predecessors on several occasions, and it had never been suggested that we should be introduced by a member of Parliament. I assure you that no discourtesy was intended to the members for Adelaide.

The Premier—I do not say that you would do that, your Honor. You are far too kind a man, but I intend to adhere to my position.

The Chancellor—I would like to point out that the University of Adelaide is not a local institution. It practically represents the whole of the State, and, therefore, I think you should hear us, but we have sent out to ask if the Attorney-General will come along and introduce us.

The Premier—It is not that you are a local body, and you are about to ask for certain privileges from the Government. If I allow you to come here without a representative of the district I will be laying down a precedent for other people to come to the Government and ignore the members for the district.

The Chancellor—But we are not a local body. Our work extends over the whole State. In the second place, we have ignored nobody, because, until this incident, we have never had an intimation that you would not treat us in the same manner as your predecessors have done.

The Premier—You will not find two men alike.

The Chancellor—We all have our individuality, but the members of this deputation have come here on a matter of great public importance. If we had been informed that you desired us to be introduced by one of the members for Adelaide, we should have been very glad to ask one.

The Premier — I think the deputation quite understood that there were members for the district of Adelaide and their status must be recognised.

The Chancellor—Representatives of the University of Adelaide have always been received by the Premier. I have sent to ask the Attorney-General to introduce us, but I think ours is not a local matter at all.

The Premier—You must uphold the dignity of members of Parliament. If a man can be flouted in one way he can be flouted in another.

The Chancellor — I hope you will not make a representation of that kind. I have pointed out to you that for 30 odd years we have been received by the successive Premiers of the State, and this rule has been laid down for the first time on this occasion, so I do not think you can suggest that anyone has been flouted.

After a few moments' interval Mr. W. D. Ponder, M.P., arrived, and briefly introduced the deputation.

The Minister of Education, in the course of his reply, said he desired to remove from the minds of those present a misapprehension that might exist. He did not want them to go away with the idea that the present Government had established a new rule and that that deputation was the first to come under it. On many occasions previous Governments had refused to receive deputations which were not introduced in accordance with custom.

QUESTIONS IN PARLIAMENT.

In the House of Assembly on Thursday Mr. Young asked the Premier what was the rule of the Government with regard to the introduction of deputations. Could deputations be introduced by any member, or was the privilege confined to members of the district interested?

The Premier (Hon. J. Verran) took it that it was the right of every member of Parliament to introduce deputations on matters respecting his district. Mr. Young was referring to the deputation from the University Council that morning. He took it to be the right of every member to introduce deputations from his district. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Jackson—That is the policy of your Government?

Mr. Verran—That is so.

Mr. Rudall—This is a good chance for another Gilbert and Sullivan comedy.

Mr. Verran—You would make a good figure in it.

Mr. Young asked whether it was not a fact that the deputation about the Gepp's Cross strike had been introduced to the Premier by a member for Wallaroo.

Mr. Verran said that deputation came at a moment's notice and as Mr. Winter was a member of the union—

Mr. Young—I was a member of the University council.

Mr. Verran—It was a matter of urgency and Mr. Winter had a right to introduce the deputation.

Mr. Young asked if the deputation from the Royal Agricultural Society on the registration of stallions was not introduced by Sir Lancelot Stirling and received by the Government.

Mr. Verran said he had done nothing more than the previous Commissioner of Crown Lands (Mr. L. O'Loughlin) had done. He held that every member for a district should have the right to introduce a deputation concerning the needs of his district. What happened that morning was nothing unusual. If any hon. member of the House was elected by a majority of the electors of the State he should have a right to introduce an important deputation.

Mr. Rudall—This was not a district, but a State matter.

Mr. Blundell asked if it would not be a good thing if these institutions would, as a matter of common courtesy, notify the members for the district of a deputation.

Mr. Verran said he had stated that morning that he thought the members for the district should be informed.

ADELAIDE UNIVERSITY.

EXTENSION POLICY.

DEPUTATION TO THE PREMIER.

On Thursday morning Mr. Ponder, M.P., introduced a large and representative deputation to the Premier (Hon. J. Verran), and asked for a Government subsidy pound for pound for buildings erected and to be erected, and in the event of the removal of the Destitute Asylum to give those grounds and buildings over for University extension purposes.

—Chancellor's Speech.—

The Chancellor (Sir Samuel Way) said they asked for the payment by the Government subsidy for the new buildings they had erected, and, secondarily, for the same subsidy for buildings of immediate urgency. The practice of granting the subsidy had existed since the foundation of the State 34 years ago. It had never been in doubt. During the last 10 years they had erected the Elder Hall and Conservatorium, the Prince of Wales Buildings, and the very much required medical school. They had cost £35,650, and the subsidy was £17,825. They did not apply for the subsidy at the time, in consequence of the financial stress, but they expected that payment when the opportune time occurred. They had immediate and very pressing wants for new buildings. During the last 10 years there had been an unprecedented expansion of the University. In 1899 there were 581 students, while now there were 1,040. Other comparisons were:—Professors, 8 and 11; lecturers, 16 and 29. For the last 20 years they had received no special grant except 5 per cent. per annum on their endowment. During the last six or seven years the Government of New South Wales had paid £150,000 for new University buildings. The Melbourne University in addition to the subsidy of £21,000 had received £37,000, and £70,000 had been spent by the Government on new buildings between 1883 and 1902. They wanted an extension of the library, which was crowded out, additional rooms for schools of classics and philosophy, and further accommodation for the law school, which at present had to scurry from room to room. Then adequate accommodation was needed for geological and mineralogical departments, for the caretaker's lodge, for herbarium and departments of botany, for common rooms for students, &c. The new buildings required would cost £11,000, and they asked for a Government subsidy of £5,500. They wanted to begin the work at once, and have it concluded by March, so as not to interfere with the work of the University. In regard to ground space, Melbourne had 100 acres, Sydney 128 acres, while Adelaide had only five acres. He would like to see the poor people in the Destitute enjoying fresh air and light employment, so conducive to the happiness of life in the country. In that event the Destitute Buildings could not be put to more worthy use than University extension. He asked Mr. Verran to use his strong influence to bring that about. The Register had made a statesmanlike suggestion, which they gladly emphasized, that to make the Education Block complete the University should have the two blocks to which he had referred. Then they would have a site which would be the envy of every State of Australia, and the admiration of visitors to their shores.

—Letter From Mr. R. Barr Smith.—

He had just received the following letter from Mr. Barr Smith, who had put the position with great weight:—"Dear Sir Samuel Way—I am very sorry I am not able to be with you on the deputation to the Premier to-day. I hope you will be able to convince him that there is no other public use to which the land you are applying for can be put, at all so important as using it for the subsidiary buildings necessary to the healthy expansion of the University. We are completely surrounded and hemmed in by other institutions; the sole outlet for the University is in the direction of the Destitute Asylum and the police parade ground. I hope you will be able to obtain the promise of a reversionary interest in these, and as immediate possession as is consistent with public convenience. It is our last chance; there is no other place available. We must go on greatly crippled if we do not get this land. In the eastern States the need of room by the universities has been there liberally provided for. The Premier must be convinced that your present application is very reasonable and moderate.—Always, yours very truly, R. Barr Smith." They did not require the £17,000 to put away in their coffers, but to replace the amount taken from the endowment fund. The money was to make their present work efficient. He could mention the requests for further extension, which had been under consideration of council:—Schools of dentistry and veterinary science, with necessary teachers; additional professorships or lectureships—French, German, biology, pathology, ancient history, astronomy, botany, and zoology; subdivision of chairs—classics, economics and mental and moral science, and history and English language and literature, and residential colleges.

The Hon. R. Butler said it would be a great pity to make Federal property of one of the most valuable sites the State owned in Adelaide. (Hear, hear.) Both Mr. Peake and Mr. Price, as Premiers, had shown sympathetic interest in higher education, and Mr. Price had done a great deal to advance the system. The University of Adelaide stood in the front rank of similar Australian institutions. Members of the Opposition did not regard the question as a party one, and any reasonable amount on the Estimates would have ready support.

The President of the Chamber of Commerce (Mr. E. W. van Senden) made a plea for an extension of instruction in commerce, and for the establishment of residential colleges, which should be self-supporting. Such colleges would be an immense boon.

Mr. Smeaton said he was present at the invitation of the University authorities. While the Defence Department required increased accommodation, he was prepared to devote all his advocacy to the interests of the University. Room for the Defence offices might be found elsewhere.

Mr. Young said the increase of secondary education justified extension. They had the advance of the last 20 years as a guide.

Mr. Ryan said the University in years to come would have to deal with thousands of additional students, and 30 or 40 acres was required as an adequate site.

The Premier said the question was too big for one little party, and was one deserving the sympathetic consideration of all. (Hear, hear.) The position was that the family of the University had grown too big for its house, and they were all pleased to know that. The State would never lose by helping educational institutions. As regarded the money suggested to be placed on the Estimates by Messrs. Peake and Butler, that matter would have careful consideration. If they were going to have a greater University more room was needed. The best was done at the time. Personally he questioned whether it was wise to attach more buildings to the present University. His own opinion was that Government House and the University should be out where there were fresher air and greater freedom.

Mr. Smeaton—That means a lot of money.

The Premier said that might be so, but they were not building for their day only. They should have an adequate site. It was a question whether there should not be 100 acres, so that they could build a University which would meet all requirements for the next 100 years. They had to seriously consider whether they should part with land that might be required for Government buildings, seeing that they had to pay £175, and even £200 a foot for it. That had been his view for seven years. He had a fine affection for the University, and fully recognised the magnificent value of its work. The Commonwealth was asking for the Destitute site, but they were not going to part with it. (Hear, hear.) All the points raised would receive the consideration of Cabinet.

—Questions in Assembly.—

In the Assembly on Thursday afternoon Mr. Young said for the guidance of members of the House he wanted to ask the Premier what rule was there with the Government as regarded the introduction of deputations. Must a deputation, where it dealt with a distinctly district matter, or dealt with a public matter or public institution, be introduced to any Minister by a member for the district, or was any member of Parliament competent to be the means of introducing the deputation? The Premier said he took it to be the duty of every member of Parliament that when there was a deputation to be introduced that belonged to his district to introduce it. The hon. member was referring to what had taken place that morning, and he would quite see he would have been intruding, if he had been allowed to introduce the deputation, on the rights of members for the District of Adelaide. (Mr. Young—"Certainly not.") That was what he thought. He took it to be the right of every member to introduce a deputation connected with his own district. (Mr. Jackson—"Is that the policy of the Government?") It was the policy of his Government. (Mr. Rudall—"This is a good chance for another Gilbert and Sullivan comedy.") The hon. member would not make a bad figure for it. (Mr. Rudall—"I would be sorry to be the figure you made this morning.") Mr. Young pointed out that a deputation of men from the Gepp's Cross men had been introduced and heard by the Premier, although introduced by the member for Wallaroo. The Premier said the position was that the deputation had come at a moment's notice. Mr. Young then mentioned the occasion when the deputation from the Royal Agricultural Society approached the Government in reference to the registration of stallions. That deputation was introduced by Sir Lancelot Stirling. The Premier's final reply was that he had done nothing more than other members of the House had done. While he held the position he did not deem it proper that a member for a district should have the right to introduce a deputation regarding the needs and requirements of his own district. What happened that morning was nothing unusual. (Minister of Education—"It was the University, so you must not say anything against it.") Mr. Peake—"It is different when it is a Trades Hall affair." If a man was elected member for a district, and a deputation asked for important concessions or grant from the Government, representatives of that district should have the right to introduce that deputation. (Mr. Rudall—"It was not a District of Adelaide matter. It was a State matter.")

DIGNITY.

A Deputation Dialogue.

Premier and Sir Samuel Way.

It was a deputation from the University to the Premier on Thursday morning. Every one wore a sprig of wattle in his buttonhole, and all seemed happy and bright.

The Premier—I beg to point out most respectfully there are three or four members for the District of Adelaide. I always make it a point that when deputations are going to be introduced to me that the members for the district concerned shall have the right of leading them. I don't want to waste any time, but still I am going to maintain that I am not going to receive this deputation unless the members for the District of Adelaide, who have been appointed by the great body of the electors, are going to have the rights of their privileges.

The Chancellor of the University (Sir Samuel Way)—Who are the members for Adelaide?

Mr. Young—There is Blundell, Denny, Anstey—

The Premier—Ponder, Anstey, Denny, and Blundell.

Sir Samuel Way—Mr. Premier, I wish we had had some intimation of your having laid down this new rule. We are waiting on you on behalf of the University.

The Premier—Oh, yes.

Sir Samuel Way—For 30 odd years I have had the privilege of representing the University, and this is a new departure, which was not communicated to me until this instant. I think it is not out of want of respect for the members of the district that we come here without them, but you can hardly say that you won't hear us.

The Premier—I shall absolutely say that, your Honor.

Sir Samuel Way—Oh, will you?

The Premier—Your long-standing position in this State as a Minister of the Crown and member of Parliament certainly should give you full acquaintance with the rights of members, and those rights you ought to know.

Sir Samuel Way—I am not taking advantage of any one.

The Premier—I don't want to be unkind or discourteous, but we shall uphold the dignity and honour of the men who have been appointed by the electors of the City of Adelaide to represent them.

Sir Samuel Way—I think you misunderstand what I said. For 30 odd years I have had the privilege of representing the University, and this is the first time that such a practice has been adopted. I have been present at deputations to your immediate predecessor and to his predecessors, and it has never been suggested before that we were to be introduced by members for the district.

The Premier—Oh, well that is the stand I take.

Sir Samuel Way—No; not until this morning.

The Premier—I don't mean to say that you would be discourteous. I think you are too kind to do that.

Sir Samuel Way—This is all new to me. We had no intimation of any change of practice. The University of Adelaide is not a local institution, Mr. Premier. This institution is for the whole State.

The Premier—I quite agree with you there.

Sir Samuel Way—I should think you should hear us. Still, we have sent for the Attorney-General. We would be glad to be introduced by the Attorney-General.

The Premier—It isn't that I would not hear you, but you are a local body, and you are asking the Government for certain concessions. You get a subsidy from the Government, and therefore, coming for subsidies from the Government, I hold that if I let it be done in this instance, then it is simply a precedent for other people to come here as deputations and ignore any member of Parliament. It would have that effect, and I am against that.

Sir Samuel—We are not a local body. Our work extends over the whole State. Secondly, we have ignored nobody. Until this instance, we have never had an intimation that you would not treat us in the same manner as your predecessors would treat us.

The Premier—We won't find two men like.

Sir Samuel—We all have our individuality. This deputation comes on a matter of great public importance, and if we had been informed that you desired us to be introduced by one of the members for the district, we would have been glad to ask one.

The Premier—I thought it would be understood that the members for the district would have been considered in their proper status.

Sir Samuel—The University has always been received by the Premier. This is not a local matter in the least.

The Premier—I have taken up a stand. If a man can be flouted in one way, he can be flouted in another.

Sir Samuel—I do hope you will not make a suggestion of this kind in respect to this deputation. This rule has been laid down for the first time in this instance, and I do hope you will not suggest that any one has been flouted.

Mr. Ponder, M.P., who had been communicated with, arrived in several minutes, and in a few words introduced the deputation.

Sir Samuel Way—We express our great indebtedness to Mr. Ponder for kindly consenting to introduce us on short notice. We have always looked upon the University of Adelaide as a non-political institution, and therefore it has never occurred to us, and was never suggested to us, that we should be introduced by a member of Parliament. We took it that every member of Parliament and every citizen was interested in the question we were bringing before you. We could have no objection to being introduced by Mr. Ponder, who came to our assistance in the difficulty in which we are momentarily placed. I feel I need not take up any further time in dealing with that question.

The Premier—It is entirely in your own hands.

The practical work of the deputation then proceeded.

The Minister of Education (Hon. F. W. Coneybeer), at the conclusion of the deputation, said he did not wish those present to go away with the idea that the Verran Government had established a new rule, and they had been chosen for the first application of it. Past Governments had refused to receive deputations unless they were introduced by members of the district.
