had the advantage of seeing, appeared to him to be in all respects admirable.

A Noble Career. The career of Sir Samuel Way was well known to his contemporaries that they did not require to be reminded of it, but for the benefit of those of a later generation...

On March 22, 1861, he was admitted to the bar, and two years after on the death of Mr. Stirling became the sole proprietor of that gentleman's business.

On the following day he sat in the Full Court, and again on the Saturday morning. His public career was thus brought to a close.

The Chief Justice said he would comply with Mr. Gordon's request, although he would have preferred that the task should have fallen into more competent hands.

He would not, and he was sure, also to them, a matter for the most profound regret that the late Chief Justice's nearest surviving relative, his sister, Mrs. Allan Campbell, should not have lived to take part in the proceedings...

On the following day he sat in the Full Court, and again on the Saturday morning. His public career was thus brought to a close.

YESTERDAY'S UNVEILING CEREMONY.

Other Public Office. Of Mr. Way's other interests and activities he was not so well qualified to speak.

High Honors Conferred. Honors flowed in upon Mr. Way, both at home and abroad.

Interest in Education. For years before he became Chief Justice, Mr. Way had taken an active interest in public education.

The Final Ambition. The old name of his life had been and would be, by the loss of his devoted wife, and by the appearance of the healthy child...
