

25th. March 1907.

My dear Chester,

By some error the printers of the American Scientist have sent their bill to me and I have returned it to Britsell. The amount is 17 do. 22, which will leave you a balance of 32 dollars odd, out of the 50 dollars due for the lecture.

I shall want to use this, or part of it, for offprints from the American Naturalist, who have published my paper on linkage in mice, but seem at present to be unable to answer correspondence about offprints. Perhaps you can discover whether they are still extant and compos mentis. I wonder if my balance would bear it. - Frank.

I had a line from Bartlett the other day, who seems to have decided to stay in Cambridge in spite of the attractiveness of Gertrude's set up. I suppose he knows his business best.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,
