

21st May, 1955.

My dear Luca,

I have just realized that I have never answered your letter of May 4th. Please accept my apologies.

Yes, I had realized that you wanted both a series of six seminars, which I think I might quite enjoy, and a public general lecture, which perhaps I may endure in a good cause. Anyway I have not any particular ideas about it, as I have about the others in which I could perhaps cover the contents of about three chapters from my new book, which is now effectively completed.

With love to all your family. I shall, however, need advice as to what some of them would like.

Sincerely yours,
