

24th June, 1954.

My dear Darrois,

During the second year of my Presidency of the Royal Statistical Society, from which I am today retiring, your name, and a short list of others, was proposed and accepted for Honorary Fellowship of that Society.

It is a pleasure to me to proffer my congratulations on this election, which will, I am sure, give much pleasure in both our countries.

The Society has recently moved into improved premises in Bentinck Street (no. 21), and I hope, if and when you are in England, you will find time to make a visit to our headquarters. It would, of course, greatly convenience the Officers of the Society to know of such a visit in advance.

Sincerely yours,
