

13th, March 1946.

Dear Professor Darms,ois,

I wonder if during my coming visit I shall have the pleasure of meeting a certain M. Lemotte, a pupil of Teissier's, whom Julian Huxley mentioned to me lately as being interested in the genetics of the polymorphic snails, with which I did some work a number of years ago. Indeed I have had under consideration the recommencement of this work at my department here.

I should be immensely obliged if it were possible to send me translations of parts, at least, of my lecture material, as soon as these are completed, for I shall give very bad lectures in French unless I have an opportunity of studying the text.

Yours sincerely,
