Dear Professor Darmois,

I am writing on the chance that you may be in Paris and free to meet a pupil of mine, Mr V.G.Panse, on May 1st, who, after working for some years on the genetics of the improvement of cotton in India, has been taking a Ph.D. under me in London during the last two years. He has some good ideas in applied mathematics, and much hoped, on returning to his own country, to be able to meet you, and perhaps others of his Department when passing through Paris. As to this, however, he must now take his chance.

Yours sincerely,
