

February 1, 1940

Dear Professor Darigois,

I have your note of January 25th telling me of your visit to London. I am afraid it only arrived this morning. On the chance that your visit is more prolonged than you then expected, I should like to say how happy my wife and I would be if you could find time to visit us in Harpenden, which is about 25 miles out of London, on the Midland railway.

The Galton Laboratory is now established at Rothamsted Experimental Station, in the neighbourhood of my home. You could get in touch with me there by telephone.

Yours sincerely,