

20 May 1932.

Professor E.B. Poulton, F.R.S.

Wykeham House,
Oxford.

Dear Professor Poulton:

I am writing to let you know my plans for Wednesday, June 8th. I find I can catch a good morning train reaching Oxford at 12.38 and should like to spend the afternoon in almost unaltered sight-seeing, for neither my wife nor I know Oxford at all well. I thought it might suit you if we called at your house about 4.30, in good time for tea before the lecture. We shall have to catch the 9.34 (evening) train to London.

As you were so good as to ask us to a meal after the lecture, would you drop me a line to say whether or not we shall be changing for dinner?

Yours sincerely,

P.S. As far as I can see my lecture will be frightfully dull.

R.A.F.